

Contributors to this issue

CAREY, John

Adjunct professor at the Columbia University Graduate School of Business and managing director at Greystone Communications, he is engaged in research on consumer use of interactive television, digital television, satellite radio, personal video recorders, and other new communication technologies.

HARA Yumiko

Senior researcher, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Since joining NHK in 1978, she has engaged in numerous research projects, including "International Comparative Study of Television Broadcasting," "Adult Education and Television Use," and "Audience Behavior and Multimedia."

HIRATSUKA Chihiro

Senior researcher, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Joining NHK in 1964, he was involved in the production and editing of news programs. Among his major works is Paburikku akusesu o manabu hito no tame ni [Public Access: Citizens' Broadcasting] (Sekai Shisoshu, 2002).

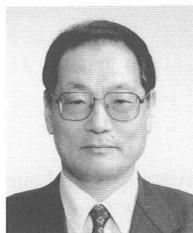

MITSUYA Keiko

Vice department chief, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Upon joining NHK in 1970, she was appointed to the Institute and has since engaged in broadcasting-related opinion polls, such as audience ratings surveys. Starting in 1990 she has been supervising the conduct of time use surveys.

OHTA Masahiro

Senior researcher, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Joining NHK in 1970, he specialized in economic affairs, the international economy, finance, and securities. Among other positions, he served as chief editor for programs dealing with economic issues. He is currently engaged in media research on the Middle East.

OKUDA Yoshitane

Senior researcher, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Joining NHK in 1962, he served previously as a news reporter specializing in social issues, and he is currently adviser to the executive committee of the International Federation of Journalists.

SHIGEMORI Maki

Joined NHK in 1985. From 1997, she worked on audience surveys in the Programming Bureau and moved to the Broadcasting Culture Research Institute in 1999, where she has been engaged in research on relationships between television programs and viewers, mainly qualitative surveys.

SONE Toshiro

Senior researcher, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Joining NHK in 1966, he was foreign correspondent in Paris and Sydney, and Senior Officer, Sports, of the Asia Pacific Broadcasting Union, based in Kuala Lumpur. He was involved in the production of the international signal for the 1988, 1990, and 1998 Olympic Games.

OKAMATO Takashi

Editor of NHK Broadcasting Studies and director of the Media and Management Research Division, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Joining NHK in 1971, he was a reporter of political and international news and foreign correspondent based in Teheran, Jakarta, Sydney, and Bangkok.

* * *

Editorial note: Japanese names in NHK Broadcasting Studies are given in the customary surname-first order.