

Contributors to this issue

HANAWA Kazuma

Senior researcher, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. After working for the regional services division of the overseas broadcasting department for thirty years since joining NHK in 1971, he moved to the Institute in 2001 and has been engaged in surveying recent developments in broadcasting in Asian countries.

HARA Yumiko

Senior researcher, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Since joining NHK in 1978, she has engaged in numerous research projects, including those on “International Comparative Study of Television Broadcasting,” “Adult Education and Television Use,” and “Audience Behavior and Multimedia.”

KODAIRA Sachiko Imaizumi

Senior researcher, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Since joining NHK in 1977, she has been involved in various types of studies on children and the media and the educational uses of the media. Her recent publications include a study of children and TV over its fifty-year history and a study of global trends in educational broadcasting for children.

KONO Kei

Senior researcher, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Joining the Institute in 1973 in the public opinion poll department, she specializes in surveys on national elections trends and social and political attitudes. She was in charge of the 7th Survey on Japanese Value Orientations conducted in 2003.

PAVLIK, John V.

Professor of the Department of Journalism and Media Studies, School of Communication, Information and Library Studies, Rutgers University, State University of New Jersey. He is also director of the Journalism Resources Institute at Rutgers. He is a faculty associate at the Columbia Institute for Tele-Information, Columbia University. His books include Converging Media: Introduction to Mass Communication in the Digital Age (co-authored with Shawn McIntosh; Allyn & Bacon, 2004).

YAMADA Ken'ichi

Senior researcher, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Joining NHK in 1984, he was a reporter specializing in international (especially Chinese) affairs and economic issues. He served as foreign correspondent, stationed in Beijing 1993–94. He is currently engaged in media research on China and Taiwan.

YOKOE Hiroyuki

Executive researcher, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Joining NHK in 1968 as a TV director, he was engaged chiefly in the direction and production of art and history programs. In 2001 he moved to the Institute, where he has conducted surveys and research on digital broadcasting content and television audience behavior.

TSUNEMATSU Shin'ichi

Editor of NHK Broadcasting Studies and director of the Media and Management Research Division, NHK Broadcasting Culture Research Institute. Joining NHK in 1975, he reported on social issues and international news, and served as foreign correspondent based in Teheran, Cairo, New Delhi, and Paris.

* * *

Editorial note: Japanese names in NHK Broadcasting Studies are given in the customary surname-first order.